It was the first paper to intro-duce such a feature, and the column has always been ably edited from the days of old Major Noah down to this time.

Many of the questions sent to the editors are curious and suggestive. From the number before us of the 18th inst. we cull the following specilith inst. we cull the following specimens:

QUESTION—"I am in a very unhappy situation, and really require the advice of a disinterested party like yourself. Some time since I was easily captivated by a fascinating creature. Being of a cautious nature before, before the final step was taken, I wisely, though unfortunately, when almost too late, induced an intelligent lady friend to make the sequalitance of this fascinating creature in order to procure for me some little information as to the actual amount of amiability, etc., in her composition. The report returned was satisfactory' enough on some points, but annexed to it was the following startling analysis of the physical structure of the fascinating creature. You will doubtless comprehend it, and believe me when I assure you that I derive no comfort from the positive assertion of the intelligent lady friend that it is no doubless comprehend it, and believe me when I assure you that I derive me comfort from the positive assertion of my intelligent lady friend that it is no morse than the average. I learned that the fascinating creature was composed as follows:—Rattan, six parts; rattus et mousus, five; capill, chignon (waterfall,) twenty; capill, chignon (waterfall,) the collection of the compound being by no means what I bargained for, I obstinately refused to take it. As I am obliged to defend the position I have assumed, I would respectfully inquire whether, in self-defence, I may not advance something about trifling with my affections—false pretences, and all that sort of thing, you know—and give it some weight by substantiating the above result of my investigations?

Answer,—Strictly speaking, if a man marry a lady whom he subsequently discovers to be a composition resembling your "fascinating creature," he ought to be entitled to a divorce, and if he bought a wife as he would any other species of merchandise, no doubt he would be released from his contract on showing that the goods delivered were not, in fact, of the quality represented. But marriage is a contract of a different kind. It is commonly based upon a series of strategic performances called a courtship, in which each party enacts a part somewhat foreign to its real nature, and in which the effort to decive is generally mutual and sometimes extraordinary." "Your eyes are nhture, and in which the effort to decive is generally mutual and sometimes extraordinary. "Your eyes are your market" in such a case. You trust to your own skill and judgment, and you take the responsibility of "catching a tartar." Still, if the "fascinating creature" had subjected you to a nice analysis, which composition do you 'imighte would have proved the less desirable, yours or her own? If you are physically more perfect than berself, (no thanks to anybody perhaps but your parents,) how about your moral nature? She may be gentle, loving, ? She may be gentle, loving,

ANSWER—Possess your soul in peace and marry the lady. You will find her sensitiveness maryelously diminish and her diffidence miraculously disappear before she has nursed her second object of maternal solicitude. Wives are rarely diffident with their husbands, especially if thwarted in some favorite purpose, and they soon learn to regard the world at large with considerable self-possession after acquiring the usual aplomb in the family circle. The husband soon communicates his presence of mind (that's the amiable way in which we account for it) to his helpmeet. QUESTION-"Thaveabout $2,000, which Answer.—We think all kinds of securities will be lower by and by; but we should advise you to invest in Government securities, at any rate. Some people prefer the 7-30's and some the six per cent, bonds. Please yourself in that respect. All are equally good, sound and solid as an investment. They may go down and they will go down, in sympathy with the money market, by and by; but they are certain to go up again. They are perfectly safe, and I you can only afford to hold on to them long enough, you will get 120 yet for 100 long enough, you will get 120 yet for 10 paid—of course some years hence.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19, 1866.

A Few Plain political Axioms, That Cannot be Successfully Disputed or Denied, and which serve to solve the Perpiexed Problem of the States of the States, and the People of the States lately in Rebellion against the Authority of the United States.

We clip the following from the Washington Chronicle, which credits the auorship to John Minor Botts, of Virthorship to John Minor Botts, of Virginia;

2. The right of secession is not only not authorized, but it is expressly forbidden by the Constitution of the United States.

2. It follows, that all ordinances of secession adopted by the States lately in rebellion were null and yold in law.

3. That the allegiance of the citizen is due to his State, and that there are thirty-six different allegiances in the United States, and not one man owing allegiance to the great central Government, which is supremeover all, isapproposition too absurd to be argued.

4. From which it results that no State has been out of the Union, and could not be carried out otherwise than by successful revolution; and to admit that any of the rebellious States are or have been out of the Union would necessarily amount to an admission that the Union had been dissolved, and that we had been engaged in a foreign and not a civil war; all of which would materially impair the virtue and efficacy of that instrument which is recognized and claimed as the supreme law of the land.

of But whilst no body of men, how yer constituted, could take a State out ever constituted, could take a State out of the Union, except by force of arms, yet my attempt to do so, by those owing allegiance to the United States, assuredly constituted the gray's crime of high treason, if any such erime still exists under our institutions.

6. The right of expatriation or denationalization, however, has never been denied to the people of this country; and, whilst they could not take a State out of the Union, it cannot be denied that the citizens of the rebellious States could take themselves out at pleasure, either individually or collectively.

could take themserves out at pleasure, either individually or collectively.
7. Nor can it be disputed that the late so-called Confederate States did for four 7. Nor can the disputed that the late so-called Confederate States did for four years constitute a government "de facto;" and it follows that all those who assisted in creating that de facto government, by voting in convention for an ordinance of secession, or signing the same, or who voluntarily took the oath of allegiance to, or held office, civil or military, under the said "de facto" government, which offices could only be held by citizens of a government then hostile to and at war with the United States, thereby allemate the United States, thereby allemate the United States, and by thus renouncing their allegiance, disclaimed all pretensions to its protection, and are therefore aliens to this Government, and can only be restored to the rights of citizenship through the established laws of naturalization or by a special act of legislation.

8. There can be no difference in law.

be Greede to be Cleared.

Special Dispatch to the Putaburph Commercial.

The great feature of Congress to-day was the reception of the President's message in the Senate vetoing the bill to enlarge the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau. This morning an extraordinary cabinet session was convend at 10 o'clock, which remained in session till conlarge the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau. This morning an extraordinary cabinet session was convend at 10 o'clock, which remained in session till o'clock, which remained the session till o'clock, which remained the session till o'clock, which remained in session till o'clock, which remained in session till o'clock, which remained the session till o'clock, which could be feel and the session till o'clock, which remained the session the session till o'clock, which remained the session till o'clock the session till o'clock the session till o'clock the session order would be carried out, unless the Senate should decide to revoke it. The galleries were then cleared of every hody but the reporters, and their doors were closed.

The Senate then proceeded to the important business before it. The President is clothed with the power to grant reprieves and pardons to those who have committed offences against the United States; but as none are tegally offenders, and as no man in this country can be legally punished for any offence, no matter how atrocity of the Senate and supported the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, and supported this motion by declaring that all differences could be reconciled. A majority of the Senators, he said, belonged to the party which elected the President, and it should be their object not to separate from him. He demanded the those lately in rebellion have been premature, and are null and void.

11. It is patent to observing men, that all attempts at reconstruction in many of the States, through the misplaced confidence and unappreciated kindness and misgnanimity of the President, through the action of those who have occupied the relations of alien enemies to the United States, have not only failed in their anticipated effects, but are in many respects unsafe as a precedent, pernicious in their results, dangerous to our institutions, and should be commenced "de novo."

12. Therefore, in all such States as have and, in the opinion of the law making power, been finally reconstructed, it will be right and proper that a military or provisional governor, of loyal antecedents, should be appointed, except for the State of Virginia,) with instructions to call a covernion, to be composed of loyal men only, to be elected by those who are authorized to yote by their existing State constitutions.

management of them. Hence they are private institutions modified, as it were the private institutions modified, as it were private institutions modified, as it were the private institution in the private institutions modified, as it were the private institution in the private institution is a substitution of the private institution in the private institution is a private institution in the private institution in the private institution is a private institution in the private institution in the private institution is a private institution in the private institution in the private institution is a private in the private institution in the private in the private institution in the private institution in the

has been totally disregarded and set aside; and inasmuch as they have proceeded without authority to remove all disabilities imposed upon themselves by the constitution, and have at the same time endeavored by their legislative action to make treason a virtue to be rewarded, and loyalty to the United States a crime to be punished, by removing from office every loyal citizen whom they could reach, and substituting in their stead those who have figured conspicuously in the rebel service, and who are disqualified by the constitution from holding offices which they have been selected to fill; therefore it is clear that there has been no constitutionally organized legislative body in Virginia since their present constitution was adopted in the year 1894, and that by necessary consequence all acts, and parts of acts, resolutions, elections, appointments, and other proceedings adopted by either of the bodies styling themselves "The Legislature of Virginia," since the adoption of the Alexandria constitution have been violation of the plainest provisions and requirements of that constitution, and are absolutely null and void, and of no effect.

15. In this condition of things, it is imperatively necessary that the restoration of that Sinte to its national rights should be commenced "de store" by the call of a Legislature by the Governor of the State, to be composed of loyal men anly, under such restrictions upon the eligibility to office as the constitution provides, and under such enlargement of
